Made higher with new mounds of snow. Dryden.
2. An artificial hill raised in a garden, or other place.
He might see what mounds they had in short time cast,
and what a number there was of brave and warlike soldiers.
Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
3. A publick treasure; a bank. Now obsolete.
These examples confirm'd me in a resolution to spend my time wholly in writing; and to put forth that poor talent God hath given me, not to particular exchanges, but to banks or mounds of perpetuity, which will not break. Bacon.
TO MOUNT. v. n. [monter, French.]
1. To rise on high.
Doth the eagle mount up at thy command, and make her nest on high? Job iii. 27.
I'll strive, with troubl'd thoughts, to take a nap;
Left leaden slumber poize me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory. Shakespeare.
A base ignoble mind,
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shakespeare.
The fire of trees and houses mounts on high,
And meets half-way new fires that show'r from sky. Cowley.
If the liturgy should be offered to them, it would kindle jealousy, and as the first range of that ladder which should serve to mount over all their customs. Clarendon.
Ambitious meteors set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun; not considering, that they have no more time allowed them in their mounting than the single revolution of a day; and that when the light goes from them, they are of necessity to fall. Dryd.
2. To tower; to be built up to great elevation.
Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds, yet he shall perish. Job xx. 6.

Make fair deductions, see to what they mount. Pope.
TO MOUNT. v. a.
1. To raise aloft; to lift on high.
The fire that mounts the liquor till 't runs o'er,
Seeming to augment, waistes it. Shakespeare.
What power is it which mounts my love so high,
That makes me fee, and cannot feed mine eye? Shakespeare.
The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by. Ral.
2. To ascend; to climb.
Shall we mount again the rural throne,
And rule the country kingdoms, once our own? Dryden.
3. To place on horseback.
Three hundred horses, in high stables fed,
Of these he chose the fairest and the best,
To mount the Trojan troop. Dryden's En.
Clear reason, acting in conjunction with a well-disciplined, but strong and vigorous fancy, seldom fail to attain their end:
fancy without reason, is like a horse without a rider; and reason without fancy is not well mounted. Grew's Conf. b. ii.
4. To embellish with ornaments.
5. TO MOUNT guard. To do duty and watch at any particular post.
6. TO MOUNT a cannon. To set a piece on its wooden frame for the more easy carriage and management in firing it.
MOUNTAIN. n. f. [montagne, French.] A large hill; a vast protuberance of the earth.
I had been drowned; a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man, and what a thing should I have been when I had been swelled? I should have been a mountain of mummy.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe,
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where fits deformity to mock my body. Shakespeare.

MOU

From Acmon's hands a rolling-stone there came,
So large, it half deserv'd a mountain's name! Dryden.
MOUNTAIN. adj. [montanus, Latin.] Found on the mountains; pertaining to the mountains; growing on the mountains.
Now for our mountain sport, up to yond hill,
Your legs are young. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
